Blackwater Draw "Black & White" Exhibit Ends on Jan. 26

Blackwater Draw National Historic Landmark, the archaeological site located six miles northwest of Portales, was first discovered in 1929. Excavations since 1932 have found projectile points and other stone tools as well as the remains of mammoth, bison, dire wolf, camel, saber-tooth cat, and ground sloth. Blackwater Draw is the type site of the Paleoindian Clovis culture, the earliest accepted culture in North America, and the unique style of projectile point found there is known as a Clovis point.

The Blackwater Draw "Black & White" exhibit is a collaborative project between the ENMU Department of Art and Department of Anthropology and Applied Archaeology. It includes more than 50 historical black-and-white photographs from throughout the 85 years of archaeological excavations at the site. The exhibit is free and open to the public in the Runnels Gallery in Golden Library, temporarily located in Bernalillo Hall. A closing reception will be held Friday, Jan. 26 from 5-6 p.m. Additional photos can be seen in the online component of the exhibit and at the Blackwater Draw Museum in Lea Hall on the ENMU campus.

For more information about the exhibit, contact the Department of Art at 575.562.2778 or bryan.hahn@enmu.edu.
