Professional Background

Dr. Stokes has 30 years of archaeological experience, including 28 years of experience in the Southwest. He has managed and participated in projects across all of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma, and in west Texas; participated in numerous projects on the Apache-Sitgreaves, Cibola, Coconino, Coronado, Gila, Lincoln, and Tonto National Forests in Arizona and New Mexico and from previous employment with the US Forest Service; and worked on projects in North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and North Dakota. His various projects focused primarily on the Mogollon, Salado, and Hohokam cultures of the Southwest, and the Southern Plains culture area of Oklahoma, but he also maintains an active interest in protohistoric and historic archaeology, including the Spanish Colonial period. His research interests include settlement pattern studies, communities and households, and cultural interactions along boundaries. He is currently an anthropology assistant professor at Eastern New Mexico University in Portales, and teaches undergraduate and graduate level classes, in addition to conducting field and laboratory research projects. He also serves as the Director of the Agency for Conservation Archaeology. As a former New Mexico State Parks archaeologist, he was responsible for cultural compliance at Parks across New Mexico and covering all cultural time periods. From 2017-2018, Dr. Stokes served as the Tribal Liaison for the Energy, Minerals and Natural Resources Department (EMNRD). Previously as a cultural principal investigator with private firms, he was responsible for proposal writing, budgeting, and overseeing all aspects of projects for various federal, state, county, and municipal agencies, in addition to various private entities and organizations. As a former adjunct at Mesa Community College near Phoenix, Dr. Stokes taught evening classes on New and Old World archaeology between 2004 and 2014, and has presented professional research papers at Society for American Archaeology and Mogollon and Jornada Mogollon Archaeology conferences.

Current Position: Assistant Professor and Director of Agency for Conservation Archaeology, Eastern New Mexico University, Portales

Dr. Stokes began his current position as assistant professor in the Anthropology Department and as Director of the Agency for Conservation Archaeology at Eastern New Mexico University in August 2018. He teaches a full load of undergraduate and Master's level graduate classes in the Department of Anthropology, focusing on archaeological theory, prehistory of the Southwest, human geography, ceramic analysis, and research foundations classes, in addition to specialized topics such as historic archaeology and cultural resource management classes. His continuing research focuses on the southern American Southwest, primarily the ancient Mimbres and Jornada Mogollon cultures, but also maintains research interests in lower Rio Grande mobile cultures, the Spanish Colonial Period, and Euroamerican historic archaeology and land use. His research interest foci include settlement pattern and landscape analysis, community and household interactions, boundary maintenance and conflict, and ceramic analysis.

Other Work Experience: Principal Investigator Responsibilities at ACS, Ltd., Tempe, AZ and Tierra Right-of-Way Services, Tucson, AZ: 2000–2014

While serving first as Senior Project Manager and then Principal Investigator for private contracting firms in Arizona, Dr. Stokes was responsible for all aspects of managing as-needed, on-call cultural resource compliance contracts with federal and state clients. He oversaw field work associated with these contracts and ensured the work and final technical reports met the high standards required of the contracting companies and the agencies. He also oversaw single project contracts with a variety of governmental, local, and private entities and companies throughout Arizona.

Major Contracts:

Southwest Gas and Century Link: Cultural Services On-call (2013–2014). Dr. Stokes was responsible for supervising and managing on-call projects for Southwest Gas and Century Link while at Tierra Right-of-Way Services in Tucson. Duties included maintaining communications with these private companies, responding to task orders and preparing scopes and budgets, assigning personnel to projects, managing the budget and crew hours, and reviewing and submitting technical reports to the clients and SHPO and Pima County. Most projects were small surveys, although several required monitoring, documenting large Hohokam sites, and limited testing.

U.S. Bureau of Reclamation: Cultural Services On-call (2005–2013). Dr. Stokes was responsible for supervising and managing on-call projects for the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation while at ACS, Ltd. He had been involved with Reclamation projects since 2005, first as Project Director for excavations on the San Xavier District, Tohono O’odham Nation for the Farm Rehabilitation Project, followed by Class III surveys at Martinez Ranch and Coon Bluff. At the beginning of 2010, Dr. Stokes assumed the role of on-call supervisor and oversaw Class III surveys and excavations at Lake Pleasant rockshelter and Ashurst-Hayden Dam prehistoric sites, site relocation and reevaluation at Lake Pleasant and the CAP Tucson Aqueduct, and Class I and III surveys of the San Carlos Irrigation and Drainage District. Dr. Stokes oversaw all aspects of budget preparation, fieldwork implementation, report preparation, and coordination.

Arizona Public Service Company: Cultural Services On-call (2006–2013). Dr. Stokes served as Principal Investigator for this contract while at ACS, Ltd. The projects typically involve Class I and III research for permit renewals and new line and substation builds, and data recovery projects, such as the Morgan 500kV power line.

Maricopa County Department of Transportation and the Parks and Recreation Department: Cultural Services On-calls (2006–2013). Dr. Stokes served as the Principal Investigator for these contracts while at ACS, Ltd. Projects with MCDOT included road and bridge construction, including Class I and III research, testing, and data recovery. For Parks, projects included trail surveys across the park system. Dr. Stokes directly supervised all aspects of budget preparation, fieldwork, reporting, and coordination.

Specific Projects:

- Principal Investigator for preparing monitoring and burial discovery work plans for Santa Rita Mountains mine site, Tucson, Pima County, AZ; Rosemont Mining Company (2014)
